We have compared the ability of the two NHX1-related Na⁺/H⁺ antiporters NhaA (NhaP1) and NhaB (NhaP2) to preserve the natural diversity of these antiporters. Initially, we compared the ability of NhaA and NhaB to restore a functional antiporter activity in a delta nhaA nhaB (delta nhaA/nhaB) strain of Salmonella typhimurium. In this strain, expression of a single Na⁺/H⁺ antiporter is sufficient to restore the bacterium's ability to grow in the presence of Na⁺ and alkali cations. By expressing a plasmid containing NhaA or NhaB with a different or deleted gene copy, we demonstrate that each Nha antiporter alone is insufficient to restore the original phenotype of the strain. Only the co-expression of both NhaA and NhaB leads to the restoration of a functional Na⁺/H⁺ antiporter. To further address this issue, we used site-directed mutagenesis to compare the importance of the charged residues located in the putative antiporter regions of NhaA and NhaB in their ability to confer a functional antiporter activity on N
