There's something about being out of it, or even being in the midst of the process, and watching a movie that's about a film's journey. There's a zen-like tranquility that comes along with it, and it's hard not to marvel at the skill of the people working on the movie. This is the kind of movie I want to have a drink with, and have my friends and family yell at me to get them tickets to. The opening sequence is something you'd see in a Tom Six film, except he's got a doctor, and has actual medical equipment, and is giving actual patients CPR. Antonio Campos (Guillermo del Toro) is a doctor at the beginning of the film, and when the lab starts to feel the pressure, he and his co-workers try to see if they can figure out a way to manufacture a universal cure. When things go wrong, and some live are lost, the team gets a new boss, Antonio has what is essentially a self-fulfilling prophecy; he always seems to be someone's hero, because he's always so kind and gentle, and when that kindness gets mixed with some extreme pressure, he's the one to handle it. The only problem is, the world needs a hero, and he's not it. Fortunately, he's surrounded by the only people he can trust, and so he gets back on his feet, and starts looking for a cure. The film is really about friendship, and it's one of those movies that could happen in real life. People get caught in situations, and they can't get out. The only way to escape is to have someone go down with you, and in this case, it's a lot easier than you'd think. While one has to
