Start learning from the beginning of "Hello World". But a programming language is not about learning syntax, but about everything you need to implement it. Try writing code. NET in C# - and you will immediately see the full power and power of this language. "Hello World" looks and works very simply, but you only know what "Hello World" is because you wrote the code yourself or learned it in a tutorial. You will have to write and analyze a lot of code. In the beginning, you have to learn the syntax, and then learn how to solve complex problems.
