Homepage - download Bassline WinPopUpQ: Android: after I store the user's ID, how can I continue to see his or her info? Right now, I have an android app that a user is able to log into and then it gives them a button to do something. This works great, I have a textView and an editText that they use to update something in my database. After they click the button, the data is updated and I want to keep showing the user that they did this, so I keep them logged in and continue to show the data even after they close the app. My problem is, I don't know how to keep them logged in. I know about the Google Play Services but I can't understand how they did it. Do I need to put something in my own XML or would it be easier just to link their accounts to my own account and then store the user's ID somewhere? A: Since you are already making use of the Google Play Services, I would suggest that you check out the User Lifecycle section. Google Play Services provides a consistent sign-in and account management experience for users of all devices. By using a single account, you can manage all your user's Google apps with just one sign-in. Also, be sure to check
