Category:Vaishnavism Category:Hindu gods Category:ShaktismThe IEC (International Electro-technical Commission) Technical Committee 8 (Safety of Nuclear Power Plants) has created guidelines to assist operators in minimizing the hazard of exposure to low dose rate radiation. The IEC TC 8 standard covering this is entitled "Guidelines for the determination of worker and public doses from exposure to low dose-rate radiation". The official publication number is IEC TR 31450-1. The purpose of the standard is to ensure that the organization does not use personnel who are likely to be exposed to low dose-rate radiation and then subsequently fail to protect them from radiation exposure. Health physicists have received many requests to verify that these guidelines are being applied by organisations. The main hurdle is the fact that IEC TR 31450-1 is an International Standard and as such, is a closed standard. In other words, the IEC cannot provide access to a copy of the standard. However, the standard is available to Health Physics Specialists in the IEC C14 public library. This means that Health Physics Specialists can view the content of the standard, but cannot copy or take a copy of the standard. More than half of the standard, which consists of 23 chapters, relates to worker dose limits. Other areas include the use of dosimetry equipment and the importance of personal protective equipment. Chapter 8 of the standard deals with the calculation of the worker dose limit. A general discussion on the use of the standard is given in chapter 11. The standard does not list a value for the worker dose limit, other than "not to exceed". This means that, by default, the guideline is "safe", but not "optimal". An analysis of the dose limit is presented for a number of selected workplaces. The standards is provided as a series of charts, with the dose limit being presented as a function of the distance that the worker is located from the radiation source. However, as noted above, this is a closed standard and no access to the charts is allowed. The standard provides a suggested dose limit of 1 mSv per year, which is quoted for a worker who is exposed to radiation on a daily basis, but who works in the vicinity of the radiation source for a period of 1 year. For a worker who works for one year in the vicinity
