vNote is a tool that allows you to create, edit, and send notes over Bluetooth or USB. It supports a wide range of devices (Windows Mobile devices), as well as Bluetooth Low Energy (BLE) devices. It is very easy to use, requiring just a few steps to set up. The main window is basically just a text editor; however, it is possible to switch between the options via the icons on the top. The note text, or the text you want to paste, can be written in any text editor you want. However, vNote does not support code. You can also choose to simply create notes of up to 255 bytes, which makes vNote an ideal tool for meetings. Another of the great features of vNote is the ability to send notes directly to any device (Windows Mobile or not) via Bluetooth or USB. You do not need to install any other software on the mobile device to make it work. The option to save notes as a.vnt file is also very useful. vNote uses the.vnt extension, but a text file extension is not essential. It has been suggested that circulating B-type natriuretic peptide (BNP) may be a useful marker of ischaemia in patients with peripheral arterial occlusive disease (PAOD). The aim of this study was to determine whether the relationship between BNP, N-terminal pro-BNP (NT-proBNP) and ischaemia in PAOD is reflected by the same or similar cut-off values of both biomarkers. Plasma samples were taken from 185 patients and 30 controls. All the patients underwent standard evaluation of ischaemia of the lower limb and BNP and NT-proBNP were analysed by an in-house immunoluminometric assay and a commercial immunoluminometric assay, respectively. The area under the receiver operating characteristic curve of plasma BNP was lower than that of plasma NT-proBNP (0.812 versus 0.891). Using a cut-off value of 35 pg mL⁻¹ for plasma BNP as a marker of ischaemia, the sensitivity and specificity was 77 and 50%, respectively. Using a cut-off value of 200 ng L⁻¹ for plasma NT-proBNP as a marker of ischaemia, the sensitivity and specificity was 69 and 80%, respectively. Our data suggest that plasma BNP and NT-proBNP are both useful for assessing ischaemia in PAOD, but they may not be equivalent markers of ischaemia in this disease. vNote creator is a lightweight utility that aims to assist you in generating a VNT note and send it to your mobile phone via Bluetooth. The VNT file format is a text file used by multiple models of phones, also compatible with standard text editors installed on a home computer. This application embraces a simplistic approach, trying to keep things as simple as possible. Its main interface embodies a single, small window that comprises all the options, not that there are many to deal with. Most of the GUI is occupied by the text editing pane, where you can type in the note text or paste it directly from the clipboard. When more than 255 bytes are used, a warning is displayed, notifying you that the mobile phone might not support notes that long. Once your note is created, you can press the 'Save' button to export it locally in VNT format. By default, the note is saved in the same location as the application and named TempNote.VNT. Sending it to the cell phone Via bluetooth is a bit more complicated. The application works with the Microsoft Bluetooth driver and requires the 'runmenu.exe' file to be located in the same directory as the program. The 'runmenu' command is the one that calls the 'send to bluetooth' menu. The 'Save & send' button does exactly the same for the note you created. vNote creator is compatible with older phone models (such as Nokia k750i), as well as other handsets that offer support for the VNT format, like Sony Ericsson mobile phones. Its simplicity is one great advantage, but we cannot guarantee that it can transfer the generated VNT file to all Bluetooth-equipped devices. You can add the toolbar directly to the main content area of the dialogue. It can be hidden, and its buttons will appear only when it is needed. Its buttons allow you to quickly access the desired options. The buttons to the right are visible only on screens with a size of 1280 x 730 pixels or more.
