Share Trump's Foreign Policy Trap In some respects, the Trump administration's policies are "Trump-

like.” In other respects, they do not.

While doing things that truly are “Trump-like” — build a border wall, cut taxes, bail out Boeing, crush the media — the administration is doing the kinds of things that really should be the exception rather than the rule in American government: going easy on dictators and deploying troops, blocking known chemical weapons, walking away from the Iran deal.

Trump has picked a new secretary of state and a new secretary of defense. If anything, the former is more Trump-like than the latter. Rex Tillerson, who was CEO of Exxon Mobil before becoming secretary of state, speaks Russian and has strong business ties to Vladimir Putin. But he is qualified for the job and has as yet made his differences with Trump on key issues clear. Compared with the blustery and erratic James Mattis, the head of the Department of Defense, Tillerson is generally placid and unassuming. Advertisement But in other respects, the administration's approach is not "Trump-like" at all. On a number of key issues, Trump is looking at the world with a different set of assumptions, and he is leading his team in a different direction. Iran:

Trump says he is going to tear up the Iran deal, and if so he would be abandoning decades of U.S. policy in the region. In the past, a U.S. president going his own way has nearly always been buffeted from behind: his predecessors have usually been forced to back down after being taken to the woodshed in the Congressional budget process and in the media. If Trump follows through with the announcement, he would be doing something entirely different. And that is part of the problem for the moment: In public, the administration is still skirting the issue, letting the

Iranians treat the agreement as an option, not as a condition of U.S

The special piano is being built in Hanoi, Vietnam. The instrument will feature a gold leaf piano and three strings of silver, and will be the first piano to be built from wood sourced in Vietnam for over 50 years. Said to be the city of the instrument's namesake, Hanoi Piano will be the first in Hanoi to use only locally sourced lumber, with the majority of the wood coming from Southern Vietnam. Hanoi Piano is being built in Hanoi by local craftsmen, including the respected Vietnamese instrument maker, Ly Van Giang. The piano will also be built according to traditional, hand-made Vietnamese patterns. Wood for the Hanoi Piano will be sourced from local forests. Hanoi Piano will be the first piano to feature local lumber in over 50 years.New research from the University of Notre Dame provides evidence that people tend to think groups with similar political beliefs are more similar in their beliefs, but that those with contrasting beliefs are more likely to be more diverse. The research, conducted by Matthew K. Mineka of the Department of Psychology at Notre Dame and several of his colleagues, will be published in the August issue of Psychological Science. Mineka and colleagues sampled nearly 700 participants from across the U.S. and found that those with more political differences tended to view themselves, their fellow citizens and institutions as more diverse and differentiated and to be less likely to endorse conservative ideology. “Previous research has failed to draw a clear divide between the worldview
