It is a.Granulocyte colony-stimulating factor in the treatment of refractory immune thrombocytopenic purpura. Recombinant granulocyte colony-stimulating factor (G-CSF) is presently used in the treatment of a variety of hematologic malignancies. This study, therefore, examined the effects of G-CSF on a patient with immune thrombocytopenic purpura (ITP) refractory to other immunosuppressive treatments. After being treated with G-CSF for 2.5 months, the platelet count increased from a baseline of 0,000 x 10(9)/L to a maximum of 5,500 x 10(9)/L. No side effects or complications were observed. The results of this study show that the administration of G-CSF is safe and may be an effective treatment in patients with ITP unresponsive to other immunosuppressive treatments.The vast majority of known species of the hyperthermophilic crenarchaeota belong to the genus Pyrobaculum [2]. While most of the sequenced members of the genus are isolated from terrestrial sources, one species, P. thermophilum, was isolated from deep subsurface marine hydrothermal vents [1]. Cells of P. thermophilum consist of an elongated plasma-membrane bounded cell that is crescent-shaped when viewed in longitudinal section. The long, unbranched archaeum spans the length of the cell at the anterior end, connecting to a ventral plate and a ventral rod. Pyrococcus are resistant to high temperatures of up to 100°C, and usually live in extreme environments, such as deep sea hydrothermal vents, hot springs, septic tanks, and human clinical samples [2]. Many hyperthermophiles, including Pyrococcus, exist at temperatures of up to 100°C, well above those of their mesophilic relatives. Microbial survival at such high temperatures is dependent on the presence of proteins with high thermostability. Some hyperthermophilic crenarchaeota are even adapted to growth at temperatures up to 140°C, and some hyperthermophilic archaea are apparently prepared to grow at even
