The Keystone XL Pipeline will make the United States an energy superpower. Here's how that happens. Recent stories have focused on the damage that will be wrought to Alberta's prime agricultural and tourism industries if the Keystone XL pipeline isn't approved. But there's another side to the story. The US is set to become the world's single largest oil producer and the world's largest crude oil importer. Its energy supplies are nothing to sneeze at and are guaranteed to continue to rise in the years ahead. Once the Keystone pipeline is operational, a steady stream of crude from North Dakota's Bakken shale will feed growing demand for American crude supplies around the world. In fact, the US will shortly surpass Saudi Arabia as the world's largest crude oil supplier. Saudi Arabia has long controlled the international oil market. It sells to customers and more importantly, the US is the largest importer of the world's oil. As it moves to become a crude exporter, it will be the largest oil exporter in the world. Pumpjacks at the Bakken oil fields in North Dakota. (Dirk Von Knappenberger/Associated Press) Expectations are that the Keystone XL Pipeline will be finished and operational some time in early 2014. But the legacy of this pipeline is so much bigger than a single corridor of crude moving through Canada and into the US. The Keystone pipeline will be the opening gambit of a greater global war for oil. The US can outbid the Saudis, who are already being squeezed by the price of oil, for the world's
