Liver is the most important metabolic organ in the body and hepatic lipid metabolism plays an important role in whole-body glucose metabolism. Besides it, changes of dietary intake can affect the expression of anti-apoptotic genes, which are associated with the hepatic lipid metabolism. The objective of this study was to characterize the effect of feeding diets with different composition on the expression of anti-apoptotic genes in rat liver. We used semi-purified diets with high-fat (HF), high-carbohydrate (HC) and high-fat/high-carbohydrate (HFHC) content. After 9 weeks, expression of Bcl-2, Bcl-x(L), A1, A20, Mcl-1, survivin, PKC zeta, GSK-3beta and the activity of AMPK and Akt in rat liver were characterized. The most pronounced changes of the expression of anti-apoptotic genes and of the activity of AKT/AMPK signaling were observed in rats fed a diet with HFHC composition. It was noted that the HFHC diet (mostly from fats), which is high in cardiometabolic risk factors, stimulated the expression of anti-apoptotic genes, probably to prevent the elevation of intracellular lipid levels due to increased fatty acid uptake and β -oxidation. These results indicate that, in liver, a HFHC diet stimulates anti-apoptotic gene expression, possibly through the increased activity of the AKT/AMPK signaling pathway. Explore Location We

COLORADO SPRINGS -- The United States now has a new space command, replacing the Air Force Space Command and United States Space Command. Under what the command said is a new vision for the future, it will emphasize international cooperation. Commanding General William Shelton announced the creation of the commander's new vision, known as the Joint Space Operations Force, during a press conference here Wednesday. He says the vision has two goals: Help allies and partner nations to succeed in space, and improve efficiencies in space operations and decision-making. The U.S. Space Command will get a new regional focus on Alaska. Shelton says the regional command will focus on the Alaska Air Command, Joint Forces Command and Pacific Air Forces. "The operational posture of the Joint Space Force Command is no longer dependent on a single service," Shelton says. "It will be an integrated enterprise, with the different commanders clearly defined and functionally organized to accomplish the objectives of the Joint Force."

Shelton says the command will be led by retired Air Force
Maj. Gen. John "Jay" Raymond, who
