User Reviews: Users recommend the application by rating it to be both simple and good looking, though a little unstable. They also noted that if they did a better job at the interface, they would recommend it. iPad and Android users can now have the control of their music when away from home. This just comes about with one particular application. It's called Songkick. This application and service is what enables you to link with your Foursquare and Spotify accounts. Here you find what your friends are listening to, checking out, and also place places. However, what you're really looking for is a recommendation on what you should be listening to. Songkick does this for you. In fact, it gets better. It finds music for you that you might be liking as well. In fact, you can even set up a free account to save you money in the coming months. Songkick generates offers for you to purchase an album, when you can listen to it on Spotify for free. It's a great way to follow music, get recommendations, and save money, all with one application. It's just not the idea of the app that's so special. Using the app, you'll find a large number of music. You can also listen to some of the songs, albums, and more. You'll also find a social section that lets you follow your friends and followers. It's helpful as it's a way to get recommendations on what your friends and followers are listening to as well. The Sync feature lets you sync some or all of your data across devices. You can sync data from multiple sources like your Google account, Facebook account, and Twitter account, etc. With this feature, you don't have to go into each application every time to get your data sync ready. There are various tabs. You'll also see the Favorites section, Friends, Song
